Property Owners should Unite in Demanding That the Present Method of Improving the Streets De Abandoned by the City Government.

"The right of petition and remonstrance, while an inalienable right of the American citizen," said Lawyer E. A. KANSAS LEGAL CONUNDRUM.

County Atterney in Doubt Whether a Justice of the Peace Can Fine the Animal or Owner Thereof. Topeka, Kas., Aug. II.—(Special.) The big, brown, risty looking volume which holds its place on the shelf of every law-yer in the state of Kansas and peers down at visitors with a dignity born of the knowledge that it contains the compiled laws of Kansas, is filled with some of the most laughable and ridiculous strors of which it would be possible to conceive. Some of these crrors are no daubt the fault of the printer and proofender, but by fir the greater part of them were made by the distinguished solons sent by more or less rural constituencies to mailufacture law.

It is one of the duties of the altorney general of the state to advise with county attorneys upon request as to the interpretalion to be placed upon any obscure passage, and it goes without saying that his department is defuned with applications of this character. Yesterias a reporter of this character. Yesterias a reporter of the Journal dropped into the attorney generals office, where he found the authors as he perused a letter which he consents should be published, if all names were withheld. It is proper to say, however, that the missive was from a Western county, where the Foundais had elected a lawyer. The letter reads as follows:

"Hon. Attorney General: I write you this for some information about a case which I have on hand before a justice of the peace, who is withhelding his decision until you can be heard from. The law in the case is section 6724 of the compiled laws of Kansas, and reads as follows:

"To any stallon or jack shall escape."

Little girl—"No, malam. I'm not afraid, cause I sleep in the middle, "Fire Fly."

"If any stallon or jack shall escape from his owner by accident, he shall he liable for all damages, but shall not be liable for his head." "Now, the case that we have tried shows that the jack old not escape by accident, but that its owner willfully permitted it to run at large, and therefore it seemed both to me and to the justice that a line should be imposed somewhere. Under the section it would seem that the lack was to be fined, but I argue that it was clearly the intention of the learshaurs to fine the owner and not the side. The fluctice says he has no right to change the manning of any law, and that if any firm is he fined it must clearly be the lack.
